Journal of Clinical Forensic Medicine

Churchill Livingstone is delighted to announce the forthcoming publication of the Journal of Clinical Forensic Medicine, with the first edition appearing in June 1994.

The application of medical principles to the care of individuals (including victims and alleged perpetrators of crime) in contact with the police and judicial system is an ever-expanding field. Work in these areas can involve either the assessment, collection, and recording of forensic evidence, the primary care of victims, or the general medical care of individuals in police custody and prison.

The Journal of Clinical Forensic Medicine will encompass all aspects of such work throughout the world. It will provide a means for rapid publication of original research and topical articles. It will include regular reviews and editorials by experts in their respective fields. The main emphasis of the journal will be on the clinical aspects of such work - although non-clinical matters of direct relevance to the field will be constant and important features.

EUROPEAN JOURNAL OF CLINICAL INVESTIGATION

NOW MONTHLY

The Journal of the European Society for Clinical Investigation

Editors-in-Chief A.M. McGregor, A.L.W.F. Eddleston, J.F. Martin and J. Moxham
King's College School of Medicine, London, UK

The European Journal of Clinical Investigation publishes original papers in the field of clinical investigation, provided they contribute to the advancement of knowledge in this field. The term 'clinical investigation' is interpreted widely and includes studies relevant to man in health or disease, including such studies that may have taken place with animals. The journal publishes three types of manuscript: full papers, short communications and editorials. Only material which permits conclusions to be drawn is published; reports of a preliminary nature are not considered. With an editorial board reflecting the broad nature of the journal, it has an approach which covers many specialties.

Subscription Information

European Journal of Clinical Investigation is published monthly. Subscription rates for 1994 are £237.00 (Europe), £262.00 (overseas) and US$390.00 (USA & Canada*) post free. Members of certain societies may subscribe at a specially reduced rate (details can be obtained using the order form below). Please add 7% GST in Canada.
